THE EXILE'S LAMENT,

OR, LAY ME ON THE HILLSIDE.

Moderato.

WRITTEN AND COMPOSED BY J. F. MITCHELL.

1. Be - neath a far Aus - tra - lian sky An I - rish Ex - ile lay; The
2. E - vio - tion, foul and cru - el, sent Him far a - cross the foam, From 3. Each eye was wet with bri - ny tears: His words had touch'd the heart; For sand from out his glass of life Was ebbing fast a-way. The friends that stood around his bed, His that sweet spot which I - rish-men, Where'er they be, call home! The land whose hills have felt the tread Of they were ex - ilees too, and time Had fail'd to tell their smart. In ev'ry clime beneath the sky, The eyes o'uld scarcely see; His thoughts which soon would be at rest, Were far a - cross the sea; In prin - ces and of kings, Whose harp once woo'd the world, is now A mass of broken strings. In I - rish race are seen; Yet still their ev - ry thought is fix'd Up - on that Isle so green. Ho spi - rit once a - gain he stood Up - on his na - tive soil, Where They were forc'd to leave the land Which gave their fa - thers birth, As calls his friends a - round him, for The end is draw - ing near; And as a child and as a man, His foot had light - ly trod; In strangers and as out - cast, To wan - der o'er the earth, The from his pale and haggard cheek They wiped a - way a tear. An fan - cy, he could feel up - on His brow the mountain air; And time came back to him a - gain, When he was but a child; With oth - er vic - tims of mis - rule, His felt the hand of death! "God from his part - ed lips there is - sued Soft the Ex - ile's pray'r: men - 'ries of sweet ram - bles thro' Her words and val - leys will bless you, Ire - Jani," were the words Which fill'd his dy - ing breath.

CHORUS.

Lay me on the hill - side, With my face to - wards the west; To - wards that sa - cred Is - land, The land that I love best; Let a bunch of shamrocks green lie planted o'er my grave; My dy - ing pray'r is "may God bless The Island of the brave!"
